

Watson Clinic Receives Three-Year Accreditation from AAAHC

Watson Clinic has been awarded a three-year accreditation from the Accreditation Association for Ambulatory Health Care, Inc. (AAAHC).

“We are proud to have our efforts recognized with this accreditation,” said Stan Piotrowski, Chief Administrative Officer of Watson Clinic. “This achievement further illuminates our commitment to providing the highest levels of quality medical care to the residents of our community.”

The AAAHC is a private, not-for-profit organization that provides this voluntary accreditation service to various types of single and multi-specialty medical establishments across the country. The accreditation process involves a rigorous on-site, peer-based evaluation. It is performed by expert surveyors who possess extensive experience in the medical environment. Watson Clinic’s quality of service and performance were measured against the highest nationally recognized standards. They achieved impressive marks on all 583 evaluation items and were particularly singled out for their outstanding levels of patient care.

“Not only did we perform superbly in matters of policy,” said Piotrowski, “but our examiners repeatedly noted the caring and respectful treatment of our patients.”

An AAAHC accreditation signifies that an organization has met the highest standards of quality and performance, thereby illustrating to patients that an organization is trustworthy and successful in their delivery of safe, effective and efficient healthcare services. For more information on the AAAHC, you can visit their website at www.aaahc.org.